(U) South Carolina – Radioactive Pollution Leaked Through Floor of Nuclear Fuel Plant

(U) Hopkins – Radioactive uranium leaked through the floor at Westinghouse's Bluff Road fuel factory, contaminating the soil in an area of Richland County with a nearly 35-year history of groundwater pollution from the plant. The US Nuclear Regulatory Commission says the uranium, a toxic substance used to make nuclear fuel rods, seeped through a 3-inch hole in a concrete floor in part of the factory where an acid is used. The hole extends 6 feet into the ground. Officials with the SC Department of Health and Environmental Control said they have no reason to believe the uranium has trickled off the site or that public water supplies are threatened.
